

Management

You're a big picture person who knows the devil is in the details. You're good at organizing people and resources. You thrive on getting things done.

If management and supervision are among your career goals, the management track at the College of Business can help you get there.

As a manager, you will plan, organize, lead, and control the human, material, and financial resources within an organization. Through an integrated business core curriculum and experiential learning opportunities that put theory into practice, the management curriculum provides the solid grounding you need to become proficient at getting things done through successfully managing people, projects, and processes.

Potential coursework includes leadership and team building, human resource management, project management, supply chain management, venture management, family business management, and international business. The integrative focus of the management curriculum also prepares you for graduate-level studies in law, urban and regional planning, public services administration, and health care administration.

Go get things done.
