CAREER INFORMATION

Employment

Marketing Management Specialization

Opportunities exist for marketing graduates in a wide variety of organizations, including manufacturing firms, service firms, retailers, wholesalers, advertising agencies, the media and government agencies. Career options include retail, brand management, logistics management, purchasing management and more.

Consumer Insights Specialization

In order to help companies develop successful marketing strategies (e.g., branding, communication, sales, product design, pricing), companies must be able to understand their marketing environment and what consumers want, why they want it, and how they acquire, use, and dispose of products. The goal is to use consumer insights to drive marketing strategy. The Consumer Insights Specialization provides students with the skills and knowledge to quantitatively and qualitatively understand consumers in order to make effective marketing decisions.

Marketing and Digital Communications Specialization

Great companies thrive when they develop innovative products and services and communicate those ideas to consumers in compelling ways. Through a combination of marketing communications tools, including advertising, public relations, sponsorship, and sales promotions, digital marketing, and design thinking, the Marketing and Digital Communications Specialization provides students with the skills and knowledge to develop and communicate an effective product and brand strategy.

Professional Sales and Personal Selling Specialization

Successful Business practice involves growing business and retaining customers through building, developing, maintaining, and enhancing long-term relationships so that the customer and the company both receive value. Salespeople play a key role in relationship management and are often the primary connection between buyer and seller. The Professional Sales and Personal Selling Specialization provides students with the skills and knowledge to successfully influence and manage complex business relationships
